If you're revisiting somewhere a little off the beaten path you might encounter Chinese people who point and stare and even shout, "Ni hao laowai – Hello foreigner.

20 Sep 2007 . As I'm sure I must have mentioned before, when I'm not trying to unravel the ever tightening knots which make up understanding China, I like to relax with a listen or two to my hero, Mr Bob Dylan. Now I'm not going to try to convert the philistines – and the wise need no conversion, but I have to say that I am.

It is enough that you say 'ni hao', or 'xie xie' and you will get people impressed. . (Zhongguo hao haishi ni guojia hao = China is better or your home country is?): . (ni yigeren ma? = Are you alone?): This is less asked when you are studying or working in a laowai-rich environment, but when you travel by yourself to more.

6 Aug 2016 . A chubby little lady in a pale green outfit and who seems to be in a hurry is surprised to meet a laowai coming up the steps toward her. I say Ni hao but it doesn't register. The last thing she expected to see today was a laowai saying hello in Chinese. Ten metres downhill she stops and looks back. I wave.

Ich habe mich trotzdem entschlossen, die Texte auf Deutsch und Englisch zu übersetzen, da sie sonst nur sehr schwer für die Allgemeinheit der nicht in China lebenden LAOWAI zugänglich werden. Im Booklet der CD finden sich die Original-Texte in chinesischen Schriftzeichen genauso wie die chinesische Lautschrift.

Of all the mistakes I made before arrival, not learning more than ni hao in Mandarin was probably the most consequential. However, Lonely Planet Taiwan said that English was widely spoken in Taipei, and I read that as: Foreigners can get by without ever speaking a word of Chinese. The book was basically right. Of course.

8 Feb 2010 . They expect us laowai to say it because they don't expect us to be native speakers. And you probably won't ever sound naturally Chinese if you're using nihao for every greeting. Ni chi fan le ma? Or zuijin zenmayang are less formal, and more common from what I understand. I've been told on more than one.

Also, it's not that they're not attracted to laowai, but I think the golden years of a Ni Hao and a smile are long gone. The girls understand the game a little better now, try a conversation and a date instead of a drink and a dance. Sort of like Inflation, except with cross-cultural love making. Good luck, it's rough.
